CHEMICAL APPLICATION FOR A FIN FAN AIR COOLER

A power plant's air cooler system was not performing to standard. After further investigation, their fin fans were coated with organics from a nearby cat tail and cottonwood vegetation outside of the plant.

Eagle Services utilized their patent foam cleaning system that applied a low-pressure high-volume foam which attacked the organic coating on the fans, and after an hour of wait time was then rinsed off with a low pressure water system. The cleaning removed the foulant without damaging the integrity of the fans and the plant was back to running at full capacity.
